

Artifact Spotlight

During the many years of the so called “Cold War” with the former Soviet Union, the greatest fear faced by citizens of the United States was the possibility of atomic warfare. The United States government published many booklets instructing citizens on what to do in case of an attack. This 1968 booklet provided survival information for residents of nearby Pulaski County.